Vets for Peace: Spare Tsarnaev from death

Capital punishment. Activists speak out as the sentencing phase of the Boston Marathon bomber's trial begins.

Protesters gathered outside the Moakley Federal Courthouse in South Boston on Tuesday to rally against the death penalty for Boston Marathon bomber Dzhokhar Tsarnaev. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

Among the demonstrators advocating for a federal jury to spare the life of Dzhokhar Tsarnaev — the convicted Boston Marathon bomber — are a group of military veterans who oppose capital punishment.

Joe Kebartas, a 66-year-old South Boston retiree who served as a medic in the Vietnam War, was among those demonstrating outside the courthouse Tuesday, where the sentencing phase of the trial began. A just sentence, said Kebartas, who was among those from the group Veterans for Peace to demonstrate on Tuesday, would be life without parole.

"That's a just penalty for the horrific crime he did," he said.

He added, "Every life is important. The only one who has the right to take a life is God. Not our government."

Winston Warfield, a 68-year-old Vietnam vet from Dorchester, said he demonstrated against the death penalty because he wants Bostonians to "get more interested in peace."

"I'm opposed to the death penalty in any circumstances, on moral and ethical grounds. More importantly to me, I'm trying to get a discussion between this crime of terrorism and war and peace," said Warfield.

Warfield said the marathon bombings were an example of "blowback," meaning the blasts were the fruits of hawkish American foreign policy that included drone strikes and assassinations in various countries around the world.

"We Americans should be more serious about insisting on peace by our government," he said. "We are now getting caught up in this insanity."

Michael Sullivan, a 30-year-old self-employed handyman who lives in Shirley and did a tour of Iraq during his stint in the Army from 2005 to 2007, said he understands what Tsarnaev did, why he did it and that he should be penalized but added, "I don't think the death penalty should be given to someone that young."

"I'm for peace," said Sullivan, who is a member of Veterans for Peace, when reached by phone early Tuesday afternoon. "I'm for the fact that everyone has a right to live."

Tsarnaev trial

Sentencing phase begins

Prosecutors on Tuesday began their case to sentence convicted bomber Dzhokhar Tsarnaev to death with an emotional gut-punch to the jury as survivors described the toll of the April 15, 2013, attack that killed three people and injured 264.

Tsarnaev, a 21-year-old ethnic Chechen, was found guilty on April 8 of carrying out the attack as well as fatally shooting a police officer as he and his older brother, Tamerlan, prepared to flee three days later.

Survivor testimony, photos and video evidence took the same jury that found Tsarnaev guilty back to the immediate aftermath of the blasts, the smoky air rent by the screams of the wounded while those able to move scrambled over shrapnel-strewn sidewalks to try to aid those whose limbs the bombs had mangled.

The government's first witness, Celeste Corcoran of Lowell, said she remained conscious from the moment the two homemade pressure-cooker bombs went off until she was rushed to a hospital where doctors amputated both her legs.

"I remember thinking that the pain was too much and that I wanted to die," Corcoran said in sometimes tearful testimony. "Immediately I was like, 'Hell no. I don't want to die.'" REUTERS

Walsh presents Melamed with a medal. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

The last runner to finish the 2015 Boston Marathon was honored by Mayor Marty Walsh with a medal Tuesday.

Maickel Melamed, of Venezuela, who has a form of muscular dystrophy, crossed the finish line around 4 a.m. Tuesday, about 20 hours after he started the race 26.2 miles away in Hopkinton. This year's field included more than 30,000 runners. Walsh presented the 39-year-old with a medal around 12:30 p.m. Tuesday inside City Hall.

"The message here is that love is much more powerful than death," said Melamed, according to The Boston Globe. "It was real tough, but it was marvelous." GLOBE

Helipad ninja held on $500K bail

A 41-year-old New Hampshire man who was armed with a gun and nunchuks and donning body armor near a hospital helipad over the weekend was arraigned Tuesday, prosecutors said.

Brad Clarke, of Pelham, New Hampshire, now faces gun and drug charges as well as a charge of carrying a dangerous weapon — in this case nunchuks. The Boston Globe reported Clarke told police he was "just enjoying my civil liberties" before he was arrested near Boston Medical Center's helipad on Saturday. He physically struggled with police before his arrest, according to The Globe. Clarke is being held on $500,000 bail. A judge ordered him to undergo an evaluation at Bridgewater State Hospital.

Stepping down. All six MassDOT board members agree to tender resignations

All six members of the Massachusetts Department of Transportation board whose resignations were sought by Gov. Charlie Baker have agreed to step down, paving the way for Baker to remake the leadership team in charge of the embattled MBTA.

Almost a week after Baker and Transportation Secretary Stephanie Pollack requested the resignations of the board members, all of whom were appointed by the governor's predecessor Deval Patrick, the officials on Tuesday complied either verbally or in writing. Pollack is the only person who will remain on the board.

MassDOT board chairman John Jenkins and board members Andrew Whittle, Robin Chase, Joseph C. Bonfiglio and Dominic Blue all submitted letters of resignation, while longtime board member Janice Loux communicated verbally with the governor's team, indicating she would step down.

The terms of two board members — Chase, the founder and former CEO of Zipcar, and Bonfiglio, a business manager for the Massachusetts and Northern New England Laborers' District Council — were due to expire this September.

Whittle could have served until September 2016, while the terms on the board for Jenkins and Blue, who only joined in October 2013, ran through the fall of 2017.

Loux, the executive vice president of the UNITE HERE union representing hotel, gaming and food-service employees, is the longest-serving board member, and her term was due to run into 2018.

Loux was appointed by five governors, including Republicans, to serve on the board of the MBTA until former Gov. Patrick put her on the merged MassDOT board after the 2009 reform of the transportation bureaucracy.

Man found in Boston tunnel air shaft slapped with trespass charges

Busted. Police rescued then charged the tunnel dweller.

Ted Williams Tunnel / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

A Somerville man who found himself stuck in one of the tunnels under Boston is now facing trespassing charges.

Daniel J. Kelly, 27, called police Monday night around 9:20 p.m. to report he was trapped in a storm drain and could not find a way out of his location.

Troopers searched the Ted Williams Tunnel based on Kelly describing what he could see — white walls with a light blue bottom. State troopers drove around with their sirens activated in the hopes Kelly would hear them, according to authorities.

The search was eventually narrowed to the D ramp of the tunnel, with Kelly reporting he could hear a siren. The ramp was closed down for about 20 minutes while police checked vent slots, doors and ceiling openings. One trooper eventually spotted a hand waving from an upper vent located about 15 feet up on the tunnel wall.

Kelly was stuck in the vent shaft; he was sitting atop a pipe when police found him. It was not immediately clear Tuesday why he was in the tunnels.

He was consequently charged with trespassing and was taken to the State Police Tunnel Barracks. He was due to be arraigned in Boston Municipal Court.

Flawless rock rolls for $22.1 million

An eye-popping, 100-carat diamond, the highlight of a magnificent jewels sale in New York on Tuesday, sold for $22.1 million, Sotheby's auction house said. The perfect classic emerald-cut D color diamond, which is about the size of a walnut and was mined by De Beers in southern Africa, was purchased by an anonymous buyer via a telephone bid. It had a pre-sale estimate of $19 million to $25 million. Gary Schuler, the head of Sotheby's jewelry department in New York, said the gem is the definition of perfection. "The color is whiter than white, it is free of any internal perfections, and so transparent that I can only compare it to a pool of water," he explained.

The $22.1 million price, which includes the buyer's premium, fell short of the $30.6 million world-record price paid for a 118.28 carat white diamond in Hong Kong in 2013. Sotheby's said only six perfect diamonds weighing more than 100 carats have been sold at auction in the last 25 years. Schuler said the distinguishing characteristic of the huge diamond sold on Tuesday is its size and beautiful shape. Originally weighing over 200 carats, its owner spent more than a year perfecting its cut and polish. A flawless pink diamond, dubbed the "Pink Star," set a world-record price for a gemstone at auction when it sold for $83.02 million in Geneva in 2013. REUTERS / GETTY IMAGES

Five things you need to know

1 Congress to probe sex parties for leaks, DEA chief expected to step down

A U.S. congressional panel will examine whether federal Drug Enforcement Administration agents divulged secrets at sex parties that Colombian drug lords may have staged to elicit sensitive information.

Following revelations of misconduct by DEA agents, a senior Obama administration official told Reuters on Tuesday that DEA chief Michele Leonhart, who was grilled in a congressional hearing last week about the sex parties, was expected to step down from her post in the near future.

A DEA spokesman had no immediate comment.

A spokeswoman for the Republican majority of the House Committee on Oversight and Government Reform said the panel's leaks inquiry would also examine the culture and leadership of the DEA and other Justice Department investigative agencies.

The events with prostitutes took place between 2001 and 2005, but U.S. officials said the DEA did not investigate them until years later.

Leonhart's testimony at the hearing, supplemented by two U.S. government reports, raised concern among lawmakers that agents might have leaked secrets about their investigations that found their way to the Colombian drug lords. REUTERS

2 Congressman who posed with gun in office could face probe

A Republican member of Congress who posed for a photo with an assault rifle in his office could face investigation for violating the District of Columbia's gun laws.

Representative Ken Buck, of Colorado, on Thursday tweeted a picture of himself and Representative Trey Gowdy, a Republican from South Carolina, holding an AR-15 rifle.

Reporters alerted the office of District of Columbia Attorney General Karl Racine to the photo, and the information was passed on to the city's Metropolitan Police Department to investigate, said spokesman Robert Marus. REUTERS

3 Justice Dept. investigating death of Baltimore man after arrest

The U.S. Justice Department said on Tuesday that it is gathering information to determine whether it can bring civil rights charges in the death of a man who died after being arrested by Baltimore police.

Freddie Gray, a 27-year-old black man, was arrested by white officers on April 12 and died days later after slipping into a coma. A preliminary autopsy report said he died from a spinal injury. REUTERS

4 Maine governor wants constitutional amendment to abolish state income tax

Maine Gov. Paul LePage on Tuesday proposed amending the state's constitution to eliminate the income tax, telling lawmakers the strategy was the best way to make the tax cut he desires permanent.

The proposal, opposed by Democrats who control the state House of Representatives, would insert language in the state's 195-year-old Constitution permanently prohibiting the Legislature from imposing "a tax upon the income of any person," beginning in 2020. REUTERS

5 Nine people charged in bourbon heist

Nine people were charged in Kentucky on Tuesday with stealing more than $100,000 worth of bourbon whiskey, including the prized Pappy Van Winkle brand and Wild Turkey.

Prosecutors say the scheme involved a group of people who knew each other through softball and relied on workers at two Kentucky distilleries who had been taking whiskey for at least seven years.

Franklin County Sheriff's officers, acting on a tip, discovered stolen barrels of whiskey behind a shed on the property of Gilbert "Toby" Curtsinger. REUTERS

Mad Metro

Guest editor.
Matthew Weiner, creator of "Mad Men," takes over Friday's paper.

The current golden age of television might have started with the morally fraught, violent world of "The Sopranos," but the sense that TV shows had become a new art form entirely was solidified by the premiere of "Mad Men" in 2007.

The series, an impeccably directed, pristinely costumed look at a group of ad men (and women) in the '60s, was the brainchild of Matthew Weiner, who, by the way, also worked on "The Sopranos."

As the series draws to a close this spring, dark, twisted prestige dramas asking big questions about the human condition are more and more common, and there's little question that the show has influenced that rise.

In honor of the ending of one of our favorite shows, we've invited Weiner himself in to guest-edit this weekend's edition.

Make sure to pick up a copy Friday to read Weiner's thoughts on the end of his show, and more from the "Mad Men" maestro. METRO

1 The girls of 'Full House' will be the grown-up stars of 'Fuller House' sequel

John Stamos, the uncle we all wanted but avoided a lot of awkward family gatherings by not having, confirmed the "Full House" sequel rumors swirling since August to Jimmy Kimmel on Monday. But Uncle Jesse will be taking a backseat in "Fuller House," which will be all about the ladies: Netflix said the 13-episode series would focus on now-veterinarian D.J. Tanner-Fuller (Candace Cameron Bure), recently widowed and pregnant with her third child. To fill the house, her sister Stephanie and best friend Kimmy, plus teenage daughter, will move in to help. Stamos will be a producer, but he'll only appear as a guest star, same as much of the original cast, who are still in negotiations. Now comes the real question: Will Mary-Kate and Ashley Olsen take turns playing Michelle, or is there a separated-at-birth storyline to look forward to?

2 Zayn Malik already bored of 'regular' life after One Direction

Having realized that the life of the average 22-year-old sucks — student debt, applying for work in a tight job market, thinking seriously about moving back in with their parents — Zayn Malik has decided to pursue other ventures. Namely, the former One Direction member (as of less than a month ago) recently met with "Bend It Like Beckham" director Gurinder Chadha. She told Britain's Daily Mirror that Malik, who had trained as an actor before joining the boy band, is "staying true to his heart" by turning his attention to screen roles. She's working on a Bollywood musical adaptation of her hit soccer film but says Malik doesn't (yet?) have a part in it. We just have to say that if it really was the craziness of being in One Direction that caused him to quit, we're not sure how becoming a movie star in India is going to help with his Zen.

3 Jon Stewart will hug out the end of 'The Daily Show'

The sad march toward a world without Jon Stewart tucking us into bed on "The Daily Show" continues. Monday night's program brought us one step closer to the end of a political and comedic era when Stewart revealed that his final night behind the desk after 16 years would be August 6.

He promised to wear a suit and shower for the occasion, which will involve one lucky fan getting a set visit, a hug and, our decade's most prized celebrity swag, a selfie with Stewart.

Better hope he's as ready to leave as he claims and there are no tears, because we're only holding it together about this as long as he is.

4 Mulder and Scully's boss to return for 'X-Files' reboot

20TH CENTURY FOX

As excited as we were about the return of "The X-Files," it wasn't a proper reboot until all of the major players were on board. Well, get out your masking tape and keep your eyes on the sky for UFOs because everyone's favorite put-upon FBI director Mitch Pileggi has sent the perfect tweet to announce he will reprise his role: "Very happy to announce that Walter Skinner will once again be getting all grumpy and bitchy with his two wayward kids. Very happy." Series creator Chris Carter and the aforementioned "wayward kids," David Duchovny and Gillian Anderson, have already signed on for the six-episode run to air on Fox, 13 years after the show ended. But besides the aliens and government conspiracies, we expect an answer to the very real mystery of how this cast has only gotten better-looking with age.

5 Bobbi Kristina not improving: Cissy Houston

There's some conflict among the Brown-Houston families about the condition of Whitney Houston's daughter, Bobbi Kristina, after her father claimed she had woken up from a medically induced coma over the weekend.

Bobby Brown told attendees at a concert on Saturday that she woke up for the first time after being found facedown in a bathtub at her Georgia home in January.

But her grandmother, Cissy Houston, said yesterday that she had visited Bobbi Kristina, 22, in the hospital and "according to the doctors, she has global and irreversible brain damage and remains unresponsive." She was also told that Bobbi Kristina could remain so for the rest of her life. "We can only trust in God for a miracle at this time," her statement concluded.

Adrian Grenier is optimistic about changing people's attitudes toward the environment. / GETTY IMAGES

Earth Day. He also wants you to stop throwing cigarette butts on the ground.

Adrian Grenier has taken on his biggest role yet as an environmental activist. In the spirit of Earth Day, Grenier talked to us about his pet peeves when it comes to environmentally unfriendly habits.

What sparked your passion for the environment? You're one of the most well-known celebrity environmental activists.
My passion for the environment comes from a human side, not my celebrity side. I care about people, and I want everyone to have the human right to have a clean environment to live in. When businesses or other people are destroying or polluting the environment, it's an offense, and I think it goes against our civil liberties.

What was the pivotal moment for you that got you to get involved?
Every day is another pivotal moment. When you're watching and have your eyes opened and ears and heart open, it's incredible how many reasons there are every day, if you just look, to why you should care and why you should be involved and try to find better ways of living on this planet. It can be daunting and upsetting, but it's ultimately exciting and inspiring because we have the opportunity to build a better world, and we can imagine a place where we live in harmony with not just each other but also Mother Nature.

What can people do daily to make their lives more sustainable?
Just get involved. Make the choice to be more engaged with what's happening. I've never believed in creating a list of to-dos because I always imagine the more you know, the more involved you get and the more you can actually be effective in helping. If you have a list, it's almost as if you check it off and you're done, but it's more of a mentality and a lifestyle and a decision to care. ... I'm a very moderate environmentalist, believe it or not. I know that no one person can solve the problems of the planet. We really need to work together. That's why I try to do a lot of awareness work and try to get people into the conversation.

What do you think is the most pressing issue in regards to our planet?
We need to really put a lot of focus on the oceans because a lot of people don't live near the oceans and absolutely aren't living under the oceans, so a lot of this stuff seems not even real. Yet the effects are going to be very real.

Are you hopeful about people's attitude toward the environment?
I'm very optimistic. We've come a long way, so I feel like we can do great things, but I'm not resting on that hope and optimism. We have to actually do the work.

What's your pet peeve in terms of environmentally unfriendly practices that you see people doing more often than they probably realize?
Using plastic bags is totally unnecessary, and it's quite frustrating. It's also when people throw cigarette butts on the ground. It seems like such a minor, small thing, but it goes into our water drainage systems and into the oceans and there are lots of chemicals and toxins. It's one of the biggest human polluters, and it's completely avoidable.

Review. The Huntington's 'Come Back, Little Sheba' is heartbreaking, with indelible performances

"Come Back, Little Sheba" is an uncomplicated tale of familial dysfunction currently receiving a riveting production from the Huntington Theatre Company.

Though Doc and Lola's humdrum existence takes place in a simpler time, (before the invention of television), their struggles are certainly relevant today. The long-married, run-of-the-mill Midwestern couple seems resigned to their fate until their obsession with Marie, a boarder they've taken in, shakes their world up.

The pretty young coed with a hearty sexual appetite is everything they used to be. But time hasn't been kind and the aging couple, whose best days are clearly behind them, struggle with alcoholism, loneliness and despair.

Director David Cromer's masterful attention to detail makes it easy to get swept away by this gut-wrenching story. Every inch of the close-quartered, cluttered set is covered in spot-on period details like a spoon rack, a dish of butterscotch candies and a percolating coffee pot.

Similarly, every movement of this stellar ensemble, whether making coffee, setting the dinner table or sneaking a peek where you shouldn't be looking, feels purposeful and authentic.

Adrianne Krstansky delivers an extraordinary performance as the socially awkward, pitiable Lola. The quiet desperation with which she tries to invite anyone she meets into her sad, lonely world is heartbreaking. But little details, like the way she flops on the couch to listen to the radio and the curious gaze when she watches Marie sketch her nearly-naked lover Turk, are what make her performance truly remarkable.

Though Krstansky sets the bar pretty high, the others prove to be up to the task. Derek Hasenstab's superb portrayal of Doc nicely avoids taking his alcohol relapse over the top, while Marie Polizzano is equally impressive as Marie.

6 Films to see at IFFBoston

As ever, IFFBoston is a treasure trove of titles both hotly anticipated and ready to be discovered. We have yet to see such biggies as opening night bombshell "End of the Tour" — with Jason Segel as David Foster Wallace on a road trip with a fawning/nervous journo (Jesse Eisenberg) — or Bobcat Goldthwait's celebrated doc "Call Me Lucky." But here are six we can say for sure to put into your schedule. MATT PRIGGE

1 'Heaven Adores You'

Elliott Smith deserves more than a traditional biographical documentary, and he gets one — sort of. A mix of the usual talking heads and a more expressionistic approach, it takes a pile of pages from the experimental "Kurt Cobain About a Son," often setting interviews with Smith and his friends over striking footage of Portland, New York and Los Angeles today. Best of all, there's no hyperbolic praise from fellow musicians or journalists; it's just his closest friends, creating an intimate portrait of the man, not the legend. Friday, 7:15 p.m., Brattle Theatre

2 'The Look of Silence'

Joshua Oppenheimer's follow-up to "The Act of Killing" doesn't have the same audacity, but it's equally important. Here, his stars aren't remorseless Indonesian murderers but the brother of a man castrated and killed by those men, who interrogates and attempts to figure out those who did it. Sunday, 6 p.m., Brattle Theatre

3 'Slow West'

Perched somewhere between a straight-up genre entry and a dreamy, comic lark, this art-Western stars Michael Fassbender as a taciturn badass helping a gawky youngster (Kodi Smitt-McPhee) reunite with his beloved. The pitilessness is tempered by a deadpan absurdist streak, which films the sometimes-violent action in compositions that seem tightly composed without being stiff. It's masterly in quiet, weirdly funny ways, and proof that a genre presumed dead has evolved into something rich and strange. Thursday, 7:15 p.m. and Saturday, 7:30 p.m., Somerville Theatre

DON HERTZFELDT

4 'World of Tomorrow'

One of the best titles at IFFBoston '15 is only 15 minutes long. The latest from stick-figure animator Don Hertzfeldt builds off the existential despair of his last film, the feature length "It's Such a Beautiful Day," heading into the far off future for a grim but empowering look at the end of humankind. Hertzfeldt has matured since the days of smartass greats like "Billy's Balloon" and "Rejected," but in the least boring way possible, creating a beautiful downer that might break as well as make your day. Friday, 9:45 p.m. and Sunday, 5:45 p.m. , Somerville Theatre

5 '(T)ERROR'

The fest's most annoying title at least belongs to one of its most dedicated and accomplished films, which goes the distance with Shariff, a 60-something FBI informant enlisted in the wake of September 11 to rat out fellow Muslims who may (or may definitely not) be getting in deep with terrorists. It's a chilling portrait of loneliness, with Shariff forced to live a life filled with subterfuge and faked connections, and all to survive on the most meager of resources. Thursday, 9:15 p.m. and April 27, 9:30 p.m., Somerville Theatre

6 'The Wolfpack'

Cinephilia has gripped few like it has the subjects of this troubling and fascinating doc. The film follows a legion of teenage boys whose parents rarely let them stray outside their high-rise on the Lower East Side of Manhattan. Lurking under their recreations of Quentin Tarantino and Christopher Nolan movies is a portrait of a form of child abuse, made all the more disturbing for being largely suggested. The doc is all the more impressive considering it comes from a first-time director, Crystal Moselle. April 28, 9:45 p.m., Coolidge Corner Theatre

Haylie Duff has some 'Real Girl' advice

The actress' cooking show, "Real Girl's Kitchen," returns this weekend.

LISA WEIDENFELD
@LisaWeidenfeld
lisa.weidenfeld@metro.us

If you've been feeling intimidated by the learning curve involved in becoming a better cook, take a page from Haylie Duff. The actress hosts "Real Girl's Kitchen" on the Cooking Channel and cheerfully calls herself "the cooking school dropout." After her lifestyle blog (also called "Real Girl's Kitchen") started taking off, Duff thought she might take some cooking classes, but movie shoots kept taking her away, and eventually Duff concluded she could get by without lessons. "If I can learn through trial and error, so can other people," she says. The new season of the show will feature a range of dishes, something Duff says she loves: "We're not really ever stuck in one style of food." Tune in for fresh takes on ramen, a "killer" steak and Greek meatballs. We got a little inside info from the lifestyle expert on what her can't-miss kitchen items are.

Fave flavors

Garlic is a key part of any cook's repertoire, and Duff is no different. She says a garlic press is "definitely" one of her must-haves, and anyone who's ever made pasta sauce can guess why. "I use that so often because I hate having to sit there and chop garlic forever."

Skip the squeezing

Juicing lemons is all too often a foolproof test to find out if you've got any paper cuts. That's why Duff recommends getting a lemon juicer. "I put lemon in a lot of food, so any time that I can avoid having to pick out seeds and things like that, I love it," she explains. "I feel like it's my go-to."

Chopping skills

Your kitchen won't be complete without decent knives. "I have a bunch of knives, but the truth is I've got three that are just kind of my favorite, and I tend to go through those all the time," she says. So which ones make her list? "One's like a little paring knife that's serrated so it chops through everything that's tiny," says Duff. "Then two big six-inch and eight-inch chopping knives."

Catch "Real Girl's Kitchen" on the Cooking Channel on Saturday at 1 p.m. BELATHEE PHOTOGRAPHY

Get a little help from a mandoline

Your knife skills may be without par, but there are times when it helps to get that little bit of extra assistance. That's why Duff recommends a mandoline. She says she uses hers "anytime I'm making salad where I want to thinly slice radishes or celery. I have an apple fennel salad in my cookbook that I love, and you basically can't make it unless you have a mandoline," she says. "It gives a professional feel to thinly sliced vegetables."

Recipe

Duff's Veggie/Yogurt Sandwich

Serves 1

Ingredients:

- 1 cup fat-free Greek yogurt
- 2 sprigs chopped fresh dill
- 2 sprigs chopped fresh mint
- 1 pinch sea salt
- 1 sliced carrot
- 1 sliced avocado
- 6-8 slices cucumber
- 1 handful arugula sprouts
- 1 handful chopped walnuts

Directions:

Mix yogurt, dill and mint in a small mixing bowl.

Spread across both sides of bread.

Sprinkle with sea salt.

Layer remaining ingredients.

Beyond pina coladas

Pineapples are having their moment.

TINA CHADHA
@TinaatMetro
tina.chadha@metro.us

Pineapples have been everywhere. We've watched the graphic motif blossom as a key design trend, charming everyone from high fashion designers to home bloggers. And we're on board. The tropical fruit, with the wild top, immediately conjures images of fun: summer vacations, carefree parties, pina coladas!

And of course the trend is going strong in the interior design world. Pineapples have long been a symbol of hospitality. During colonial days, sailors brought the fruit back from voyages to the Caribbean islands and displayed them outside of their house as a way of saying "Come over!" to their friends and neighbors.

And the welcoming reputation stuck — it's why you can find so many vintage gold pineapple objects on Etsy. People loved decorating their homes with them. So we say plop the cheery fruit on the table before your next party. And if, like us, you can't get enough, here are some of our favorite pineapple-themed products.

Finding a home in Cambridge isn't impossible

This is the view from one of the units in the Atmark building. GUSTAV HOILAND

The secret is knowing where to look.

letters@metro.us

This isn't your grandma's Cambridge. With prices in neighborhoods like Harvard Square so high you might mistake them for Boston's Back Bay, finding an apartment across the Charles has never been harder. But there is an upside: With the outrageous prices in more traditionally popular neighborhoods, renters are finding gems in less-saturated areas of the city.

"Everything in Cambridge is super hot," says Gail Roberts of Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage, who has worked in the Cambridge market for more than 30 years. "I say that because there's such limited inventory. We've seen more up near North Cambridge, and obviously people like to be near public transportation."

Cambridge's Fresh Pond neighborhood, just west of North Cambridge, is blossoming as a popular neighborhood for renters. Proximity to the MBTA at Alewife makes the area even more attractive for professionals who previously would have sought out apartments in Harvard or Central Square. Many flock to new luxury high-rises like Vox on Two and Atmark, which offer attractive amenities and incentives.

At Atmark, tenants have poolside cabanas, an indoor-outdoor sky lounge and a wine bar with billiards at their disposal. They're also motivated by incentives like a free month's rent, or over $1,000 to cover moving costs. And in a winter as painful as this one was, both prospective renters and buyers are thrilled at the benefits of luxury high-rise living, like underground parking and the freedom from shoveling.

"Those of my clients who live in professionally managed buildings with garage parking and a concierge have never been happier," says Kevin Concannon, of the Steven Cohen Team in Boston.

But in order to find your real estate mecca, prospective renters need to seek out star agents who have connections in the specific neighborhood.

"I really think that you should get in touch with a good agent who specializes in the area that you're looking at," says Roberts. "Properties come and go so quickly. You want someone who's going to be knowledgeable to say, 'Hey, this is where we have to go to try and get this.' A Boston broker is not going to hear of something that's coming up in Cambridge as quickly as we are."

The right agent will prequalify the tenant and have the landlord excited at the prospect of a tenant moving in without vacancy between leases, Concannon adds. "There are still plenty of awesome landlords in Cambridge who keep their rents low and their tenants happy. Many of the best listings won't even make it to the MLS or Craigslist," he says. "An agent with the best landlord clients and exclusive listings is well worth the fee in the long run."

> "An agent with the best landlord clients and exclusive listings is well worth the fee in the long run."

Horoscope

♉ Taurus | April 21-May 21
Look for an artistic outlet. Home decorating or renovations will turn out well as long as you stick to a strict budget. Don't make decisions for others, or you will face opposition.

♊ Gemini | May 22-June 20
Your emotional state will discourage personal discussions with others. You would be best off delving into expressive hobbies. Quietly doing something you enjoy will help calm you.

♋ Cancer | June 21-July 22
Don't make important decisions. Confusion and uncertainty will prevail, making it difficult to do the right thing. Exposing too much personal information will put you in a vulnerable position.

♌ Leo | July 23-Aug. 22
A new friendship will blossom. You have a lot to offer, but it's important not to provoke the jealousy of someone close.

♍ Virgo | Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Focus on a way to increase your income. Delve into work and money matters so that you have a perfect sense of where you sit financially. You have what it takes to advance.

♎ Libra | Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Don't allow the actions or words of others to have a negative effect on you. Relatives or co-workers will be hard to get along with. You are best off working alone.

♏ Scorpio | Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Personal matters will require your undivided attention. You will need to take on extra responsibilities, so be prepared to step up and do what's necessary.

♐ Sagittarius | Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Moderation is key. You can make financial gains, but only if you are logical. Someone else's plan will not be in your best interest. Do your research before signing a contract.

♑ Capricorn | Dec. 22-Jan. 20
You have the energy and self-control to finish what you start. Leave yourself some time at the end of the day to enjoy pleasant recreation or to spend time with someone you love.

♒ Aquarius | Jan. 21-Feb. 18
Don't get caught up in day-to-day routines that could cloud your vision and aspirations. If you dedicate time to something you feel passionate about, success will follow.

♓ Pisces | Feb. 19-March 20
You are kind and dependable, but that doesn't mean you should let anyone take you for granted. Doing things for others is commendable, as long as you take care of your needs as well.

♈ Aries | March 21-April 20
An excursion will be eye-opening. Bring some laughter into your life by getting together with friends or doing something out of the ordinary. EUGENIA LAST

Exile in solitary confinement would be the most fitting punishment

Boston Marathon bomber Dzhokhar Tsarnaev should not be executed. To execute him would be doing him a tremendous favor. A life in exile, solitary confinement 23 hours a day, is the worst punishment a human being could ever be faced with.

If fast food workers want more money, they should do something to earn it

Re: 'Better give in to fast food workers' demands ... or else' (Metro, April 21) Letter writer Alton Yee's reasoning for fast food workers to make $15 an hour is asinine.

He's afraid they are going to spit in his food so he's willing to cop to their demands?

Thank God he's not a world leader or we'd be trading terrorists for cheeseburgers. Does he realize that all of the things he listed already happen on a regular basis?

Perhaps, if fast food workers want more money, they should try doing the best job they can do instead of being the biggest slacker they can be.

Perhaps they should try and demonstrate that they deserve more money by actually doing quality work.

And those who choose not to work hard, to call out, spit in food, make customers wait longer, etc., just because they "think" they "deserve" more should be fired. Any high school student can easily replace them.

I think it's pretty simple. People with skills and education don't necessarily start out making $15 an hour, why should fry cooks?

C's fall short yet again

NBA. The Celtics again started fast but got burned late.

Game 2 for the Celtics looked a lot like Game 1. The C's started strong last night, going on a 14-3 run at one point in the first quarter, but fourth-quarter rebounding issues stunted their upset bid as they fell again in Cleveland, this time by a score of 99-91.

On back-to-back possessions in crunch time, Boston allowed Cleveland to grab offensive rebounds. The first miscue was the most costly as LeBron James missed a 3-pointer but was able to score on a layup moments later, extending the Cavs' lead to eight with just over a minute left. James had a monster fourth quarter, scoring 15 of his 30 points in the last 12 minutes.

The Celtics led Cleveland, 26-25, after one quarter but again had issues coming out of halftime as they were held to just 18 points in the third quarter. James found Kevin Love on a reverse dunk alley-oop and J.R. Smith drained a 3-pointer in the third quarter as Cleveland built its lead to 13 at one point.

Isaiah Thomas was once again the bright spot offensively for the Celtics, scoring 22 points off the bench. Thomas drew an and-1 foul on Love with 9:15 left in regulation as the Celtics got to within two but they were unable to overcome the deficit.

Jared Sullinger and Jae Crowder both performed well for the Celtics off the bench as they had 14 and 10 points respectively.

Kyrie Irving again had a big day for the Cavs as he pumped in 26 points.

No. 4

Dodgers (9-3)

Returning home was just what the Dodgers needed as they have rattled off seven straight wins to move atop the NL West. Adrian Gonzalez is still raking to start the year.

Padres (9-5)

The Padres are catching fire, winning eight of their last 10. Over the first 14 games of the year, San Diego has averaged 5.21 runs per game.

No. 6

Cardinals (8-3)

The Cards' pitching has been the story as they have allowed a ridiculous average of just 2.18 runs per game. They played a game Sunday in two hours, two minutes.

No. 7

Braves (8-4)

The Braves are in second place in the NL East and that has come as a surprise as their pitching has been dominant, allowing 3.66 runs per game.

No. 8

Red Sox (8-5)

At one point this past week, the Sox' starting rotation had an ERA of 6.24, the worst in baseball. That will need to change quickly if the Sox want to stay atop the division.

Cubs (7-5)

Prospect Kris Bryant was called up to the majors last week, and now young shortstop Addison Russell will join him at Wrigley.

No. 10

Rockies (7-6)

Colorado has lost four straight and is no longer leading the NL West. Strangely, the Rockies are 6-3 on the road, but just 1-3 at home. The good news: DJ LeMahieu is batting .444.

No. 11

Orioles (7-6)

Adam Jones is pacing the O's offense as he's hitting .438 with five home runs and 16 RBIs. Baltimore has done well despite mounting injuries.
